To Whom It May Concern:

Student:

The above student has completed all requirements and has earned the high school equivalency credential from the Office of the State Superintendent of Education in Washington, D.C. This individual is considered a high school, grade 12, level graduate per the attached cover letter and the attached secure electronic document.

The Superintendent's office in Washington, D.C. issues high school equivalency certificates for individuals who have passed all required GED® test subjects outside of the United States ("GED® Credential"). The GED® Credential is accepted by virtually all U.S. universities, employers, and is recognized across the world.

GED Testing Service® (a joint venture of Pearson and the American Council on Education) is the sole provider of the official GED test® and recommends that universities, ministries of education, employers, and other postsecondary educational institutions outside the U.S. recognize the GED® Credential as equivalent to a U.S. High School Diploma for entrance into universities and as a qualification for employment.
The GED® test version, which was first developed in 1942, is nationally recognized and measures an individual's performance in the subjects of mathematics, reading and writing, social studies, and science. It emphasizes critical thinking and problem-solving skills over rote memorization. More than 20 million students worldwide have earned their high school equivalency GED® Credential since 1942. In 2019, students in more than 90 countries earned the GED® Credential.

Electronic GED® Credentials
GED® credentials are securely issued electronically to eliminate document tampering, fraud, and enable processing and distribution of credentials. GED Testing Service® has partnered with Parchment to launch GED Credentialing®, an electronic credentialing service that easily and securely allows test-takers and institutions to request credentials. GED Credentialing® uses patented Blue-Ribbon technology certifying the validity and assurance of the issued document. Institutions and organizations do not separately need a credential verification from GED Testing Service® because the technology detects document tampering and confirms document authenticity. Paper credentials are available, if necessary, and contain multiple security features to prevent unauthorized duplication. To verify the authenticity of the transcript/credential, please see the instructions on the cover page.
